April 13, 1975 marked the beginning of the Lebanese 1975-1990 war. For many this conflict was the result of the regional Arab-Israeli conflict, yet for others it was the product of years of accumulated Lebanese internal political divisions. Has the war ended? Are its causes still with us? How do we learn from the past? And how do we chart the way forward? This dialogue brings face to face the generation that lived through and fought the war with the university students who represent the future of Lebanon and the leaders of tomorrow to attempt to answer these questions.
