Since 9/11 there has been a remarkable growth of Arab-American theatre in the United States, providing an important new ethic expression especially in New York, which has always been a center of theatre stemming from immigrant communities. This address will provide an overview of this work with particular attention to Lebanese-Americans Leila Buck and Kathryn Haddad, Palestinian-American Betty Shamieh, Iraqi-American Heather Raffo, Egyptian-American Yussef El Guindi and the important contemporary tradition of Arab-American stand-up comedy. The leading companies producing such theatre will also be discussed.
